THE PURPOSE OF THE COUNCIL

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL ON RELIGION IN HIGHER EDUCATION has come into being to meet a particular situation and exists to meet a very present need.

The situation is a double one.

First, the Universities and Colleges of America have realized that any adequate cultural survey of human life, whether of individuals or societies, must include a description of religion as one of the permanent factors in the making of life. Liberal Arts Colleges throughout the country are making a constantly larger place for courses dealing directly with the fact of religion. In many instances these courses have multiplied to such an extent that they have resulted in the organization of separate Departments of Religion. One of the plainest academic signs of the time is this determination to accord to the religious fact in its entirety a much more adequate and sympathetic treatment than has been accorded it in the past.

Second, the Universities and Colleges of America are assuming a much wider and more intimate responsibility for the "character education" of the student. A College no longer is satisfied to impart information which is not correlated to the task of living a wholesome and useful life. The acceptance of this responsibility is expressing itself in the development of the various forms of personnel service which are being organized within the institution as part of the administration.

These fields of study and these administrative positions call for men and women who have been specially trained to meet the immediate situation. The places cannot be filled by teachers diverted from other departments or by religious workers called from other types of institutions. The present situation demands persons who are definitely prepared to take these new posts.

The Council, therefore, is primarily concerned with the task of helping to discover and train these needed men and women for our institutions of higher learning. The Council believes that religion is best represented and interpreted by persons to whom religion is a matter of personal concern and experience. It holds that an unsympathetic and purely critical account of religion is no more successful than an unsympathetic and critical interpretation of any other subject.

The Council aims, therefore, to discover among recent graduates of our Universities and Colleges men and women who propose to spend their lives in academic work, who wish to specialize in those fields which are primarily concerned with religion, and whose characters and lives exemplify their chosen fields of study and service. These men and women, year by year, a chosen few from a large number of applicants, are granted scholarships for post graduate study in the very best centers of American learning. They are graduated with the highest degrees obtainable and are placed at the service of institutions of higher learning looking for just such persons.

Letters from college and university presidents and heads of departments where its Fellows have been placed already confirm the Council in its estimate of the present opportunity and its method of meeting the existing need. Administrative officers reassure us constantly as to the existence of this need and the serviceableness of our Fellows in their several institutions.

While continuing its present line of effective contribution to the whole cause of religion in America the Council does not restrict itself to its present major line of work. It holds itself ready to advance with the developing field and the increasing opportunity and to supplement its present type of work by both a closer and

CHARLES FOSTER KENT, Ph.D.

Woolsey Professor of Biblical Literature at Yale University 1901-25.
Author of many books upon the Bible and related subjects.
Founder of the National Council on Religion in Higher Education.

a wider touch with this whole emergence of religion into the open of our American College life.

From the standpoint of the institution which we exist to serve, our peculiar value and significance lie in the fact that we come to our work with no ecclesiastical traditions to defend, with no denominational cause to further, with no desire to criticize either openly or tacitly the religion of the institution as expressed by its administrative policy or its curriculum, but only to strengthen the hands of the administration and the faculty in a free, full, and fair presentation of religion as one of the permanent factors in human culture and as one of the sources of help in personal life. The Council has counted among its Board members and Fellows Protestant, Catholic, and Jew, and continues to invite the cooperation of all such, in the adequate and sympathetic presentation of religion to the American student body and through that student body to our whole American life.

THE FOUNDING AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE COUNCIL

The Council owes its foundation to the far-seeing vision of Charles Foster Kent, Woolsey Professor of Biblical Literature at Yale from 1901 to 1925. In the winter of 1921-22, he visited a number of colleges and universities, and in connection with the delivery of lectures made preliminary surveys of conditions relative to the moral and religious life of students. He enlisted the interest and cooperation of many prominent educators and laymen and led in the movement for the incorporation of the Council with the purposes already stated. A Board of Directors and a body of Councillors, elsewhere listed in this book, were chosen to put these purposes into effect.

The enthusiasm and unflagging zeal of Professor Kent took him repeatedly to the institutions and cities of the Southern, Eastern and Mid-Western portions of the United States. He established valuable connections with men and women of influence in the field of higher education who caught his vision, rejoiced in his friendship, and continue to give of their time and substance to the cause which he espoused. In spite of his untimely death in May, 1925, the officers and Fellows of the Council have set themselves to a vigorous continuance and development of the program which he outlined. They place their dependence upon the true spirit of science and the true spirit of religion which they believe to be in closest harmony and both alike necessary to the full development of the educational process. They rely upon this happy union to lead to the full discovery of essential truth and the power of truth to verify itself in human life.

In recognition of the important services already being rendered by other agencies and desiring by every means to avoid duplication of effort, the Council limits its work to the purposes already stated. It establishes no new local organizations within colleges and universities but works wholly through administrative officers and established agencies. It sets up no creedal tests but seeks the support of all men of good will who desire to see the essential spirit of religion permeate the world of higher education.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

THIS COUNCIL relies upon the effectiveness of continuous personal service rather than upon programs or methods of organization. Although young in years, it has already achieved certain definite results.

1. It has established the National Fellowships in Religion and has appointed eighty-five such Fellows, thirty-nine of whom already occupy positions of responsibility in institutions of higher learning, and three of whom are engaged in Religious Education in other connections. The others are pursuing their graduate studies chiefly at Columbia-Union, Yale, Harvard, and the University of Chicago.

2. It has upon invitation aided in the adjustment of courses at these graduate centers, with a view to the more effective training of the Fellows of the Council for the work which lies before them.

3. It has conducted the first four annual conferences of the Fellows of the Council, and the first and second "Week-of-Work" for the discussion of teaching plans by Fellows already experienced and those about to begin teaching, under the guidance of mature consultants. The Council has thus brought to bear the united thought and planning of those who will be chiefly responsible for carrying out its purposes.

4. The officers of the Council have upon invitation of presidents and deans counselled in the development of undergraduate courses, departments, and schools of religion and the correlation of religious activities in several colleges and universities.

5. The Council is sharing in conferences of administrative officers and faculty members upon the present state of religion in institutions of higher learning.

6. The officers of the Council have, in addition to undertaking independent preliminary surveys of moral and religious conditions, shared in the inquiry into undergraduate morale conducted by the Institute of Social and Religious Research.

7. The Council has entered into harmonious relationships with other agencies at work upon various phases of the common task and is participating in plans for still further cooperation.

8. The Council has published the seven bulletins listed on the inside cover of this Year Book and distributes them free upon application.

9. It has established a placement register of persons trained in the following fields:

(1) Biblical Literature and the History of Religion
(2) Philosophy and Psychology of Religion
(3) Ethics and Social Philosophy
(4) Religious Education and Administration
(5) Educational Administration and Personnel Service

Information regarding such persons is available to Presidents, Deans and others upon request.

10. It is establishing at its office a library of books, articles and other materials dealing with the moral and religious conditions of undergraduate life and their development. This library is available to research workers.

11. It has enlisted the interest and co-operation of leading citizens in a number of the more important cities of the nation and has inaugurated the plan of state, city, or individual support for its Fellowships.

12. It has helped to stimulate public interest in the function of religion in relation to higher education.

The Board of Directors announce the election of:

Dr. Willard L. Sperry, Dean of the Theological School in Harvard University, as Dean of the Council.

Mr. James Inglis of Detroit, Michigan, as a member of the Board of Directors.

Mr. George L. Maxwell, Jr., and Mr. Ernest R. Hilgard as Field Secretaries.

The National Council on Religion in Higher Education has for the prosecution of its work no endowment or established financial constituency. A portion of its Fellowships have been provided through a grant from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial. The major portion of its funds must come, however, from interested individuals. Those who believe in the work of the Council as a distinctive approach to character education among American students are invited to share in its financial support.
